In Utica, while attendance at “mainline” Christian churches is declining, there is a demand for new religious spaces coming from the influx of immigrants to our city. These changes are reflected in establishments that include the Bosnian Islamic Association mosque on Court St., Tabernacle Baptist Church on Hopper, and the Vietnamese Buddhist Center on Riverside Drive, among others. What are the histories of these spaces? How have they coped with challenges? What defines a sacred space?

Professors Plate and Knight will illustrate their thoughts on such questions with a series of photographs and video images.
